

WEEKS'S TERM BEGUN

He Started This Morning for His Years in a Cell.

Still Courteous and Ready to Discuss His Ventures.

Only Occasionally Did His Mind Turn to Gloomy Thoughts.

Francis Henry Weeks was taken to Sing Sing Prison this morning by Deputy Sheriff Burke. The man who was wont to handle millions of dollars in trust funds, was looked upon as an unright man, a leader in refined and intellectual society, a lawyer of first-class ability, will sleep in a gloomy cell in the prison by the river tonight, and the narrow confines of this Chateau d'If will be his home for the next six and a half years.

His term of sentence is ten years, but good behavior on the part of the prisoner will entitle him to a commutation of three and one-half years. Then he will be a free man again. But a new century will have begun. The United States will have had two new Presidents; the city of New York will have added another half million to its population; Francis H. Weeks will be fifty-five years old and more, and the faithful wife who has shared his prosperity, his troubles, his sorrows, she, too, will have aged.

Perhaps the most interesting reflections of that tall, handsome, well-poised man, as he gazed out of a fourth-story window into the morning air, was the car rolled on towards his future prison home.

Weeks ate heartily of the breakfast of chops and coffee provided for him by the Tombs caterer this morning, but he had slept little last night, and there were traces of swelling under his eyes and a haggard look about his face. He was scrupulously neat in his appearance, however, when he emerged from the Tombs at eight o'clock, followed by Deputy Sheriff Burke and followed by Deputy Sheriff Brown.

The deputy sheriff considerably refrained from handcuffing the man who had squandered $250,000 of other people's money in speculation, and Weeks walked erect and buoyant between them. He was dressed in a dark suit, a black waistcoat and brown trousers. He wore a gray overcoat and a black hat. Under his arm he carried a small paper parcel, containing such articles as the officers and informants would be permitted to have in prison.

In the car a dozen newspaper men studied him for a moment, and then he would appear at the Tombs, but occasionally his thoughts would evidently turn upon his situation, and then he would appear very gloomy and brooding.

He gladly welcomed the arrival at the Grand Central Station, and the security from prying eyes afforded by the immediate passage out to the train which would not start in half an hour.

Few people recognized the man who in the tide of fortune with the two big deerskins, Brown returned to the Court House. But Weeks, smoking the last Havana he will enjoy in the twentieth century, was not in the least perturbed by the change.

Weeks refused to talk about his case. He was very silent and courteous, though, and with an air of perfect indifference that wrecked him he had regarding his West Superior Iron and Steel Company.

"That is bound to be a grand success and a great deal of money," he said, "and my interests in it are in the hands of the assigned for the benefit of my creditors."

The 10,000 check books in Weeks's twenty-seven boxes, show that in the past eight years he had been constantly drawing money from the bank where his own fortune was made, and that he had checked over hundreds of thousands of dollars to him in that manner, "being drawn on the West Superior Company."

The books show beyond question that the embezzled money had been used for enterprises, and that Weeks himself did not profit by the losses of the widows and orphans.

Down to a year ago he had constantly drawn $250,000 to his credit in bank, and the balance steadily increased. In 1885, it was $200,000. April 22 he drew the last check, for $250,000. Since then, it was for $5,000. April 7 the last check was drawn. It was for $200,000, payable to Francis H. Weeks. It was probably taken for use in escaping from the clutches of the law, and was doubtless the last check he had when he ran away May 1st.

It left a miserable $125.00 in the bank out of the $250,000. Weeks provided himself with a pipe and tobacco yesterday. Joe Burke told him that Warden Durston and Prison Keeper Connaughton would not let him have cigars at Sing Sing, and he will not place in his dismal cell from the pipe of consolation.

The other four indictments against Weeks will be held over him, and if it is discovered that he is a deliberate, cool-headed scoundrel, he will be a violator in the property of others; if it is found that instead of sinking this money in an enterprise from which he expected a return, he has hidden the fortunes away for his own benefit, he will be punished on the other side of the law. This term of sentence is completed.

Mr. Weeks's last wife, Mrs. Weeks, his hand yesterday after his sentence. She is a brave woman. When he returned from the court, she went to the prison where she waited for him, she advanced towards him with both hands outstretched, and a sublime smile of encouragement on her face.

Well, what is it? Ten years," she asked, sweetly, and when he answered yes, she said, simply:

Then they met at farewells in whispers, the officers, considerably with-drawn from the scene, and the room, SING SING, N. Y., Nov. 9.—Francis H. Weeks, the millionaire defaulter, arrived here on the Hudson train at once taken to the prison and turned over to the custody of Warden Durston. Weeks had his baggage taken to a clerk's office after which he was taken to the barber shop, where his hair was closely cropped and his moustache shaved off. He was then compelled to take a bath and don the regulation convict garb.

Warden Durston has not yet decided where he will put Weeks. It is work that he will probably have some light employment, as physically, he is unfit for hard work.

AFTER "THE TERROR."

John C. Molloy Wanted for a Post-Office Robbery.

Two Deputy United States Marshals left this morning for Barrytown, Dutchess County, this State, to bring here John E. Molloy, known better as "The Terror." He is charged with being the leader of a gang who robbed the Barrytown Post-Office, Dec. 17.

The day following the robbery Post-Office Inspector R. B. Ruppert began investigation. He became fully convinced that the robbery was done by a gang.

The post-office is located in the clothing store of D. B. Ruppert, a well-known Postmaster. Among other things stolen were several suits of clothes and a trunk to the value of $25,000. A half a dozen ago Inspector Ruppert visited the store at Red Hook, and in conversation with a prisoner obtained information from him concerning the Barrytown robbery. The inspector at once issued a warrant for the arrest of Molloy. Molloy is regarded as the bad man of the county. He has been arrested several times. He will be ar-

DETECTIVE PLAYS CLERK.

And Young Scheriff Is Caught Robbing His Employers.

Still Courteous and Ready to Discuss His Ventures.

Only Occasionally Did His Mind Turn to Gloomy Thoughts.

Francis Henry Weeks was taken to Sing Sing Prison this morning by Deputy Sheriff Burke. The man who was wont to handle millions of dollars in trust funds, was looked upon as an unright man, a leader in refined and intellectual society, a lawyer of first-class ability, will sleep in a gloomy cell in the prison by the river tonight, and the narrow confines of this Chateau d'If will be his home for the next six and a half years.

His term of sentence is ten years, but good behavior on the part of the prisoner will entitle him to a commutation of three and one-half years. Then he will be a free man again. But a new century will have begun. The United States will have had two new Presidents; the city of New York will have added another half million to its population; Francis H. Weeks will be fifty-five years old and more, and the faithful wife who has shared his prosperity, his troubles, his sorrows, she, too, will have aged.

Perhaps the most interesting reflections of that tall, handsome, well-poised man, as he gazed out of a fourth-story window into the morning air, was the car rolled on towards his future prison home.

Weeks ate heartily of the breakfast of chops and coffee provided for him by the Tombs caterer this morning, but he had slept little last night, and there were traces of swelling under his eyes and a haggard look about his face. He was scrupulously neat in his appearance, however, when he emerged from the Tombs at eight o'clock, followed by Deputy Sheriff Burke and followed by Deputy Sheriff Brown.

The deputy sheriff considerably refrained from handcuffing the man who had squandered $250,000 of other people's money in speculation, and Weeks walked erect and buoyant between them. He was dressed in a dark suit, a black waistcoat and brown trousers. He wore a gray overcoat and a black hat. Under his arm he carried a small paper parcel, containing such articles as the officers and informants would be permitted to have in prison.

In the car a dozen newspaper men studied him for a moment, and then he would appear at the Tombs, but occasionally his thoughts would evidently turn upon his situation, and then he would appear very gloomy and brooding.

He gladly welcomed the arrival at the Grand Central Station, and the security from prying eyes afforded by the immediate passage out to the train which would not start in half an hour.

Few people recognized the man who in the tide of fortune with the two big deerskins, Brown returned to the Court House. But Weeks, smoking the last Havana he will enjoy in the twentieth century, was not in the least perturbed by the change.

Weeks refused to talk about his case. He was very silent and courteous, though, and with an air of perfect indifference that wrecked him he had regarding his West Superior Iron and Steel Company.

"That is bound to be a grand success and a great deal of money," he said, "and my interests in it are in the hands of the assigned for the benefit of my creditors."

The 10,000 check books in Weeks's twenty-seven boxes, show that in the past eight years he had been constantly drawing money from the bank where his own fortune was made, and that he had checked over hundreds of thousands of dollars to him in that manner, "being drawn on the West Superior Company."

The books show beyond question that the embezzled money had been used for enterprises, and that Weeks himself did not profit by the losses of the widows and orphans.

Down to a year ago he had constantly drawn $250,000 to his credit in bank, and the balance steadily increased. In 1885, it was $200,000. April 22 he drew the last check, for $250,000. Since then, it was for $5,000. April 7 the last check was drawn. It was for $200,000, payable to Francis H. Weeks. It was probably taken for use in escaping from the clutches of the law, and was doubtless the last check he had when he ran away May 1st.

It left a miserable $125.00 in the bank out of the $250,000. Weeks provided himself with a pipe and tobacco yesterday. Joe Burke told him that Warden Durston and Prison Keeper Connaughton would not let him have cigars at Sing Sing, and he will not place in his dismal cell from the pipe of consolation.

The other four indictments against Weeks will be held over him, and if it is discovered that he is a deliberate, cool-headed scoundrel, he will be a violator in the property of others; if it is found that instead of sinking this money in an enterprise from which he expected a return, he has hidden the fortunes away for his own benefit, he will be punished on the other side of the law. This term of sentence is completed.

Mr. Weeks's last wife, Mrs. Weeks, his hand yesterday after his sentence. She is a brave woman. When he returned from the court, she went to the prison where she waited for him, she advanced towards him with both hands outstretched, and a sublime smile of encouragement on her face.

Well, what is it? Ten years," she asked, sweetly, and when he answered yes, she said, simply:

Then they met at farewells in whispers, the officers, considerably with-drawn from the scene, and the room, SING SING, N. Y., Nov. 9.—Francis H. Weeks, the millionaire defaulter, arrived here on the Hudson train at once taken to the prison and turned over to the custody of Warden Durston. Weeks had his baggage taken to a clerk's office after which he was taken to the barber shop, where his hair was closely cropped and his moustache shaved off. He was then compelled to take a bath and don the regulation convict garb.

Warden Durston has not yet decided where he will put Weeks. It is work that he will probably have some light employment, as physically, he is unfit for hard work.

AFTER "THE TERROR."

John C. Molloy Wanted for a Post-Office Robbery.

Two Deputy United States Marshals left this morning for Barrytown, Dutchess County, this State, to bring here John E. Molloy, known better as "The Terror." He is charged with being the leader of a gang who robbed the Barrytown Post-Office, Dec. 17.

The day following the robbery Post-Office Inspector R. B. Ruppert began investigation. He became fully convinced that the robbery was done by a gang.

The post-office is located in the clothing store of D. B. Ruppert, a well-known Postmaster. Among other things stolen were several suits of clothes and a trunk to the value of $25,000. A half a dozen ago Inspector Ruppert visited the store at Red Hook, and in conversation with a prisoner obtained information from him concerning the Barrytown robbery. The inspector at once issued a warrant for the arrest of Molloy. Molloy is regarded as the bad man of the county. He has been arrested several times. He will be ar-

ANNIE PIXLEY DEAD.

Brain Fever Carries Away the Ever Popular "Miss."

Still Courteous and Ready to Discuss His Ventures.

Only Occasionally Did His Mind Turn to Gloomy Thoughts.

Francis Henry Weeks was taken to Sing Sing Prison this morning by Deputy Sheriff Burke. The man who was wont to handle millions of dollars in trust funds, was looked upon as an unright man, a leader in refined and intellectual society, a lawyer of first-class ability, will sleep in a gloomy cell in the prison by the river tonight, and the narrow confines of this Chateau d'If will be his home for the next six and a half years.

His term of sentence is ten years, but good behavior on the part of the prisoner will entitle him to a commutation of three and one-half years. Then he will be a free man again. But a new century will have begun. The United States will have had two new Presidents; the city of New York will have added another half million to its population; Francis H. Weeks will be fifty-five years old and more, and the faithful wife who has shared his prosperity, his troubles, his sorrows, she, too, will have aged.

Perhaps the most interesting reflections of that tall, handsome, well-poised man, as he gazed out of a fourth-story window into the morning air, was the car rolled on towards his future prison home.

Weeks ate heartily of the breakfast of chops and coffee provided for him by the Tombs caterer this morning, but he had slept little last night, and there were traces of swelling under his eyes and a haggard look about his face. He was scrupulously neat in his appearance, however, when he emerged from the Tombs at eight o'clock, followed by Deputy Sheriff Burke and followed by Deputy Sheriff Brown.

The deputy sheriff considerably refrained from handcuffing the man who had squandered $250,000 of other people's money in speculation, and Weeks walked erect and buoyant between them. He was dressed in a dark suit, a black waistcoat and brown trousers. He wore a gray overcoat and a black hat. Under his arm he carried a small paper parcel, containing such articles as the officers and informants would be permitted to have in prison.

In the car a dozen newspaper men studied him for a moment, and then he would appear at the Tombs, but occasionally his thoughts would evidently turn upon his situation, and then he would appear very gloomy and brooding.

He gladly welcomed the arrival at the Grand Central Station, and the security from prying eyes afforded by the immediate passage out to the train which would not start in half an hour.

Few people recognized the man who in the tide of fortune with the two big deerskins, Brown returned to the Court House. But Weeks, smoking the last Havana he will enjoy in the twentieth century, was not in the least perturbed by the change.

Weeks refused to talk about his case. He was very silent and courteous, though, and with an air of perfect indifference that wrecked him he had regarding his West Superior Iron and Steel Company.

"That is bound to be a grand success and a great deal of money," he said, "and my interests in it are in the hands of the assigned for the benefit of my creditors."

The 10,000 check books in Weeks's twenty-seven boxes, show that in the past eight years he had been constantly drawing money from the bank where his own fortune was made, and that he had checked over hundreds of thousands of dollars to him in that manner, "being drawn on the West Superior Company."

The books show beyond question that the embezzled money had been used for enterprises, and that Weeks himself did not profit by the losses of the widows and orphans.

Down to a year ago he had constantly drawn $250,000 to his credit in bank, and the balance steadily increased. In 1885, it was $200,000. April 22 he drew the last check, for $250,000. Since then, it was for $5,000. April 7 the last check was drawn. It was for $200,000, payable to Francis H. Weeks. It was probably taken for use in escaping from the clutches of the law, and was doubtless the last check he had when he ran away May 1st.

It left a miserable $125.00 in the bank out of the $250,000. Weeks provided himself with a pipe and tobacco yesterday. Joe Burke told him that Warden Durston and Prison Keeper Connaughton would not let him have cigars at Sing Sing, and he will not place in his dismal cell from the pipe of consolation.

The other four indictments against Weeks will be held over him, and if it is discovered that he is a deliberate, cool-headed scoundrel, he will be a violator in the property of others; if it is found that instead of sinking this money in an enterprise from which he expected a return, he has hidden the fortunes away for his own benefit, he will be punished on the other side of the law. This term of sentence is completed.

Mr. Weeks's last wife, Mrs. Weeks, his hand yesterday after his sentence. She is a brave woman. When he returned from the court, she went to the prison where she waited for him, she advanced towards him with both hands outstretched, and a sublime smile of encouragement on her face.

Well, what is it? Ten years," she asked, sweetly, and when he answered yes, she said, simply:

Then they met at farewells in whispers, the officers, considerably with-drawn from the scene, and the room, SING SING, N. Y., Nov. 9.—Francis H. Weeks, the millionaire defaulter, arrived here on the Hudson train at once taken to the prison and turned over to the custody of Warden Durston. Weeks had his baggage taken to a clerk's office after which he was taken to the barber shop, where his hair was closely cropped and his moustache shaved off. He was then compelled to take a bath and don the regulation convict garb.

Warden Durston has not yet decided where he will put Weeks. It is work that he will probably have some light employment, as physically, he is unfit for hard work.

AFTER "THE TERROR."

John C. Molloy Wanted for a Post-Office Robbery.

Two Deputy United States Marshals left this morning for Barrytown, Dutchess County, this State, to bring here John E. Molloy, known better as "The Terror." He is charged with being the leader of a gang who robbed the Barrytown Post-Office, Dec. 17.

The day following the robbery Post-Office Inspector R. B. Ruppert began investigation. He became fully convinced that the robbery was done by a gang.

The post-office is located in the clothing store of D. B. Ruppert, a well-known Postmaster. Among other things stolen were several suits of clothes and a trunk to the value of $25,000. A half a dozen ago Inspector Ruppert visited the store at Red Hook, and in conversation with a prisoner obtained information from him concerning the Barrytown robbery. The inspector at once issued a warrant for the arrest of Molloy. Molloy is regarded as the bad man of the county. He has been arrested several times. He will be ar-

ANTI-MACHINE MEN.

Brain Fever Carries Away the Ever Popular "Miss."

Still Courteous and Ready to Discuss His Ventures.

Only Occasionally Did His Mind Turn to Gloomy Thoughts.

Francis Henry Weeks was taken to Sing Sing Prison this morning by Deputy Sheriff Burke. The man who was wont to handle millions of dollars in trust funds, was looked upon as an unright man, a leader in refined and intellectual society, a lawyer of first-class ability, will sleep in a gloomy cell in the prison by the river tonight, and the narrow confines of this Chateau d'If will be his home for the next six and a half years.

His term of sentence is ten years, but good behavior on the part of the prisoner will entitle him to a commutation of three and one-half years. Then he will be a free man again. But a new century will have begun. The United States will have had two new Presidents; the city of New York will have added another half million to its population; Francis H. Weeks will be fifty-five years old and more, and the faithful wife who has shared his prosperity, his troubles, his sorrows, she, too, will have aged.

Perhaps the most interesting reflections of that tall, handsome, well-poised man, as he gazed out of a fourth-story window into the morning air, was the car rolled on towards his future prison home.

Weeks ate heartily of the breakfast of chops and coffee provided for him by the Tombs caterer this morning, but he had slept little last night, and there were traces of swelling under his eyes and a haggard look about his face. He was scrupulously neat in his appearance, however, when he emerged from the Tombs at eight o'clock, followed by Deputy Sheriff Burke and followed by Deputy Sheriff Brown.

The deputy sheriff considerably refrained from handcuffing the man who had squandered $250,000 of other people's money in speculation, and Weeks walked erect and buoyant between them. He was dressed in a dark suit, a black waistcoat and brown trousers. He wore a gray overcoat and a black hat. Under his arm he carried a small paper parcel, containing such articles as the officers and informants would be permitted to have in prison.

In the car a dozen newspaper men studied him for a moment, and then he would appear at the Tombs, but occasionally his thoughts would evidently turn upon his situation, and then he would appear very gloomy and brooding.

He gladly welcomed the arrival at the Grand Central Station, and the security from prying eyes afforded by the immediate passage out to the train which would not start in half an hour.

Few people recognized the man who in the tide of fortune with the two big deerskins, Brown returned to the Court House. But Weeks, smoking the last Havana he will enjoy in the twentieth century, was not in the least perturbed by the change.

Weeks refused to talk about his case. He was very silent and courteous, though, and with an air of perfect indifference that wrecked him he had regarding his West Superior Iron and Steel Company.

"That is bound to be a grand success and a great deal of money," he said, "and my interests in it are in the hands of the assigned for the benefit of my creditors."

The 10,000 check books in Weeks's twenty-seven boxes, show that in the past eight years he had been constantly drawing money from the bank where his own fortune was made, and that he had checked over hundreds of thousands of dollars to him in that manner, "being drawn on the West Superior Company."

The books show beyond question that the embezzled money had been used for enterprises, and that Weeks himself did not profit by the losses of the widows and orphans.

Down to a year ago he had constantly drawn $250,000 to his credit in bank, and the balance steadily increased. In 1885, it was $200,000. April 22 he drew the last check, for $250,000. Since then, it was for $5,000. April 7 the last check was drawn. It was for $200,000, payable to Francis H. Weeks. It was probably taken for use in escaping from the clutches of the law, and was doubtless the last check he had when he ran away May 1st.

It left a miserable $125.00 in the bank out of the $250,000. Weeks provided himself with a pipe and tobacco yesterday. Joe Burke told him that Warden Durston and Prison Keeper Connaughton would not let him have cigars at Sing Sing, and he will not place in his dismal cell from the pipe of consolation.

The other four indictments against Weeks will be held over him, and if it is discovered that he is a deliberate, cool-headed scoundrel, he will be a violator in the property of others; if it is found that instead of sinking this money in an enterprise from which he expected a return, he has hidden the fortunes away for his own benefit, he will be punished on the other side of the law. This term of sentence is completed.

Mr. Weeks's last wife, Mrs. Weeks, his hand yesterday after his sentence. She is a brave woman. When he returned from the court, she went to the prison where she waited for him, she advanced towards him with both hands outstretched, and a sublime smile of encouragement on her face.

Well, what is it? Ten years," she asked, sweetly, and when he answered yes, she said, simply:

Then they met at farewells in whispers, the officers, considerably with-drawn from the scene, and the room, SING SING, N. Y., Nov. 9.—Francis H. Weeks, the millionaire defaulter, arrived here on the Hudson train at once taken to the prison and turned over to the custody of Warden Durston. Weeks had his baggage taken to a clerk's office after which he was taken to the barber shop, where his hair was closely cropped and his moustache shaved off. He was then compelled to take a bath and don the regulation convict garb.

Warden Durston has not yet decided where he will put Weeks. It is work that he will probably have some light employment, as physically, he is unfit for hard work.

AFTER "THE TERROR."

John C. Molloy Wanted for a Post-Office Robbery.

Two Deputy United States Marshals left this morning for Barrytown, Dutchess County, this State, to bring here John E. Molloy, known better as "The Terror." He is charged with being the leader of a gang who robbed the Barrytown Post-Office, Dec. 17.

The day following the robbery Post-Office Inspector R. B. Ruppert began investigation. He became fully convinced that the robbery was done by a gang.

The post-office is located in the clothing store of D. B. Ruppert, a well-known Postmaster. Among other things stolen were several suits of clothes and a trunk to the value of $25,000. A half a dozen ago Inspector Ruppert visited the store at Red Hook, and in conversation with a prisoner obtained information from him concerning the Barrytown robbery. The inspector at once issued a warrant for the arrest of Molloy. Molloy is regarded as the bad man of the county. He has been arrested several times. He will be ar-

GREY HALF-PRICE
ONE-LETTER SALE

OF FINE CLOTHING
BY
A. H. KING & CO.

Everything in the Store at Precisely
HALF THE REGULAR PRICE.

A bold move to unload our big stock of Fine Clothing. Greater than any offer ever made, since the original tickets are not altered on any garment, as some other stores are now advertising. The Clothing we offer is of the highest grade, of the best makes in America.

Men's Regular $20 Overcoats, now..... $10.00
Of Kersey, Meltons, Vicunas and Chinchillas.

Men's Regular $30 Overcoats, now..... $15.00
In all the finest grades, makes and styles.

Men's Fine $20 Suits, now..... $10.00
In sacks, frocks, &c.

Men's Fine $22 Suits, now..... $11.00
In the finest Worsted, Cheviots, &c.

Men's $35 Shetland Ulsters, now..... $17.50
Men's $25 Shetland Ulsters, now..... $12.50

Men's Fine $5 Trousers, now..... $2.50
Men's Fine $8 Trousers, now..... $4.00

All other goods in the house in the same proportion.

OPEN DURING THIS SALE AT BOTH STORES UNTIL 9 O'CLOCK P. M.

A. H. KING & CO.,
627 Broadway, 124th Street,
629 Near Bleeker St. Cor. 3d Ave.

HARD TIMES FOR TAMMANY. MRS. WEST SAYS SHE WON.

Republican Legislature Means Defeat for Many R. O. B. Bills.

Pool-Room and Race-Track Gambling May Be Suppressed.

Fraud Alleged at the Snug Harbor Polling Place.

Mayor Gilroy will probably be unable to carry out the threat he made recently that he would do all he could to have the Comptroller's veto power taken away. His threat was called forth because Comptroller Myers vetoed the proposition to approve the $11,000,000 dock improvement scheme.

The Mayor's threat implied that he would ask the Legislature to repeal that clause in the Consolidation act which provides that the Comptroller's affirmative vote is necessary for the expenditure of money raised on bonds.

Of course, the Mayor thought at that time the Legislature would be Democratic and as obedient to Tammany Hall as the last one. But the next Legislature will not take orders from Fourteenth Street, and the clause will remain in the Consolidation act.

The laws for New York and Brooklyn, in fact, all the cities, will be made by the country members. The Republican members in the Legislature will be in the majority in both houses.

In the Constitutional Convention, too, the Republican majority will be made up of delegates from the country districts. Tammany Hall will vote with the majority, and particularly on one bill, which the Republicans propose to introduce, namely, that providing for the Australian ballot system. The Republicans gave the majority in the Convention, and they will carry it off without party emblems or designation, and abolished the party.

The names of the candidates of all parties are printed on one ballot, and the voter is to check off the name of the candidate he desires to vote for.

It requires a certain degree of intelligence to prepare such a ballot. A man must know how to read and write. Tammany Hall will be made up of delegates from the country districts. Tammany Hall will vote with the majority, and particularly on one bill, which the Republicans propose to introduce, namely, that providing for the Australian ballot system. The Republicans gave the majority in the Convention, and they will carry it off without party emblems or designation, and abolished the party.

The Greater New York bill, it is predicted, will become a law. It will be the most important election of the Legislature bars the way to many schemes involving large expenditures of money which Tammany Hall has passed every Winter, and which furnished patronage and fat droppings to the organization.

With only the local offices, the sources of patronage in Albany cut off, race riots as well as pool-room gambling, to be abolished, there will be hard times in the Wigwam this Winter.

Guests of Dowager Duchess of Sutherland Robbed.

(By Associated Press.)
LONDON, Nov. 9.—Drownworth Hall, near Rugby, where the Dowager Duchess of Sutherland had taken for the Winter, has been entered by burglars, and valuable jewelry, belonging to visitors, was stolen.

The hypophosphites of lime and soda combined with cod-liver oil in Scott's Emulsion improve the appetite, promote digestion, and increase the weight.

They are thought by some to be food; but this is not proved. They are tonics; this is admitted by all.

Cod-liver oil is mainly a food, but also a tonic.

In Scott's Emulsion the cod-liver oil and hypophosphites are so combined as to get the full advantage of both.

Let us send you a book on CAREFUL LIVING; free.

SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, New York.

An Empty Purse
Equitable Credit System.

Has few friends—but it has one good one—that will stick to you through thick and thin—our

Go right ahead and make yourselves comfortable for the Winter. If any FURNITURE, CARPETS, BEDDING, OIL-CLOTHS, STOVES, LAMPS, BABY CARRIAGES, PICTURES, CLOCKS and FORTIERES are needed don't pinch and squeeze and wait to get the cash. Your promise will reach further than the money you could save in a year. We'll take the LITTLE you can spare weekly or monthly and be satisfied.

</